It is a sad reality that a number of people in India cannot read or write. It was so when India became independent, though the situation has improved there as much to be done in this field, who does not know that our country cannot progress as it should do if the majority of the people are ignorant and uneducated, unaware of their fundamental rights and duties. The people must be able to read books, magazines and newspapers. Those of us who are educated have a moral duty of educating those who have never had a chance to go to school as the success of democracy requires educated citizens who may discharge their duties well as citizens and safeguard their rights granted by the constitution.

- Why is our country unable to progress as it should do? [2]
- What, according to the writer of the passage, is the moral duty of the educated people? [2]
